

Supporting Information for

Where did the Arizona-plano go? Protracted thinning via upper- to lower-crustal processes

Gilby Jepson¹, Barbara Carrapa¹, Sarah W. M. George¹, Lauren J. Reeher¹, Paul A. Kapp^{1,3}, George H. Davis¹, Stuart N. Thomson¹, Chiara Amadori^{1,2}, Chris Clinkscates¹, Sean Jones³, Andrew J. W. Gleadow³, and Barry P. Kohn³

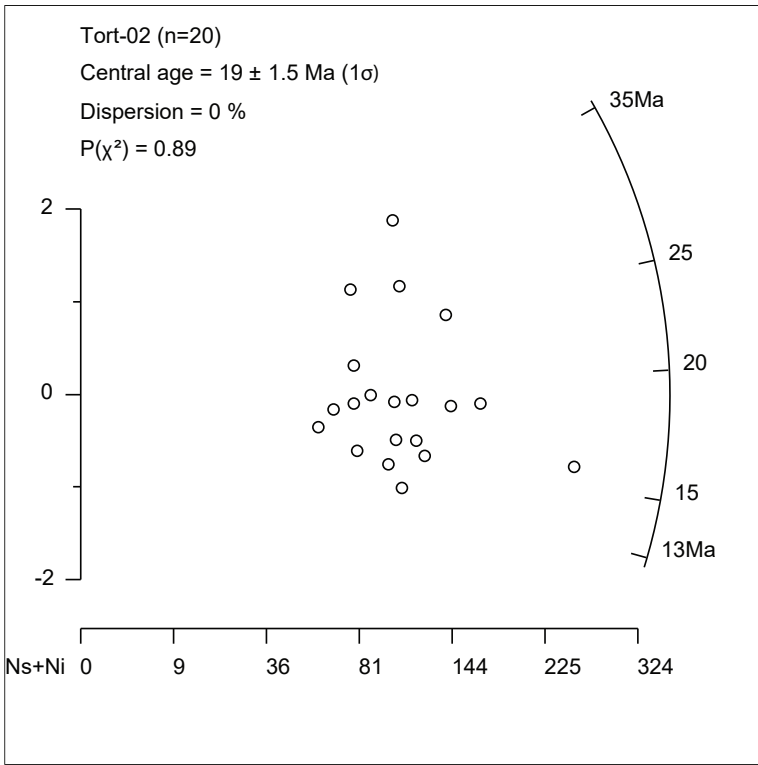

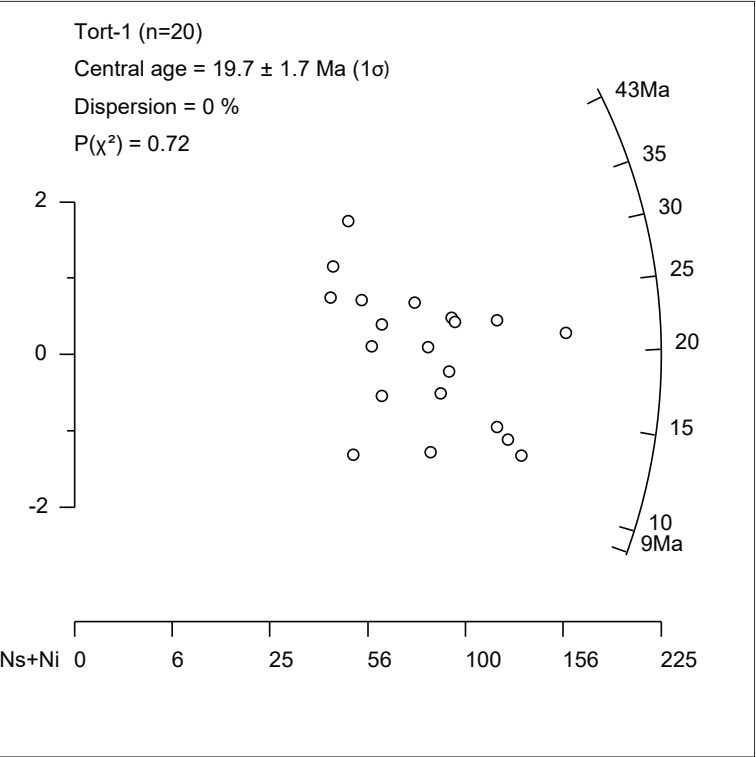

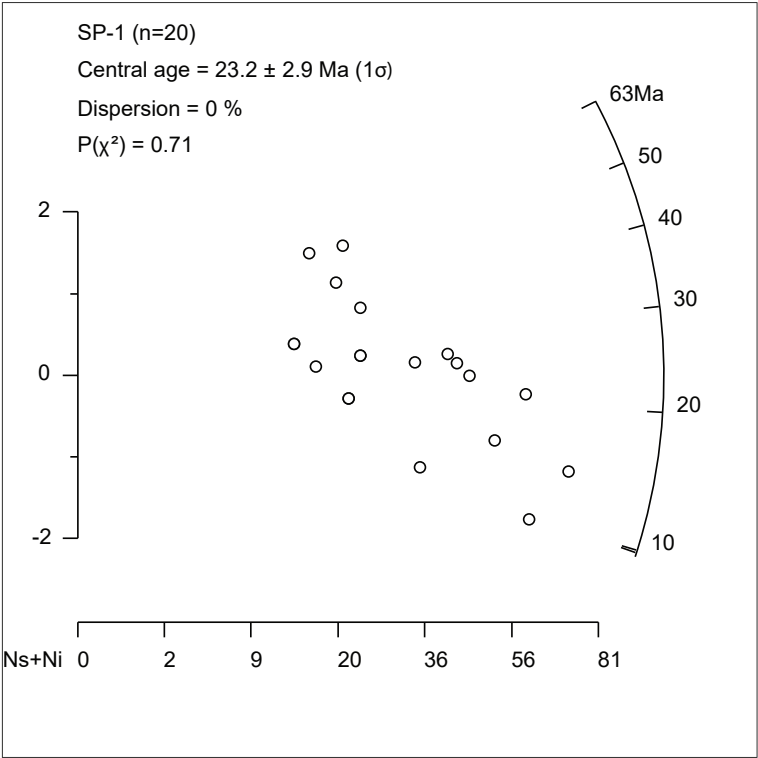

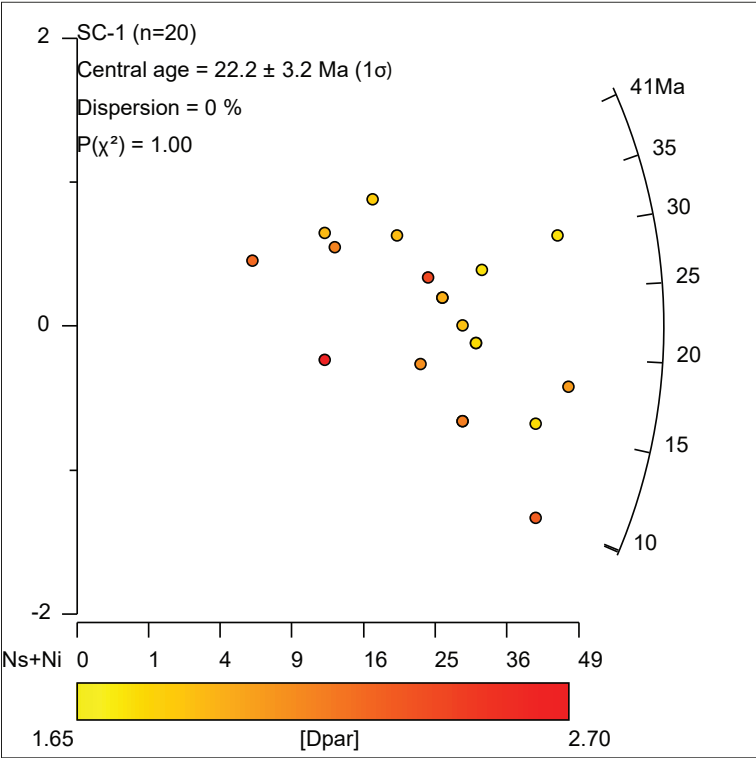

¹Department of Geosciences, University of Arizona, Tucson, Arizona 85721, USA

²University of Pavia, Department of Earth and Environmental Sciences, Pavia, Italy

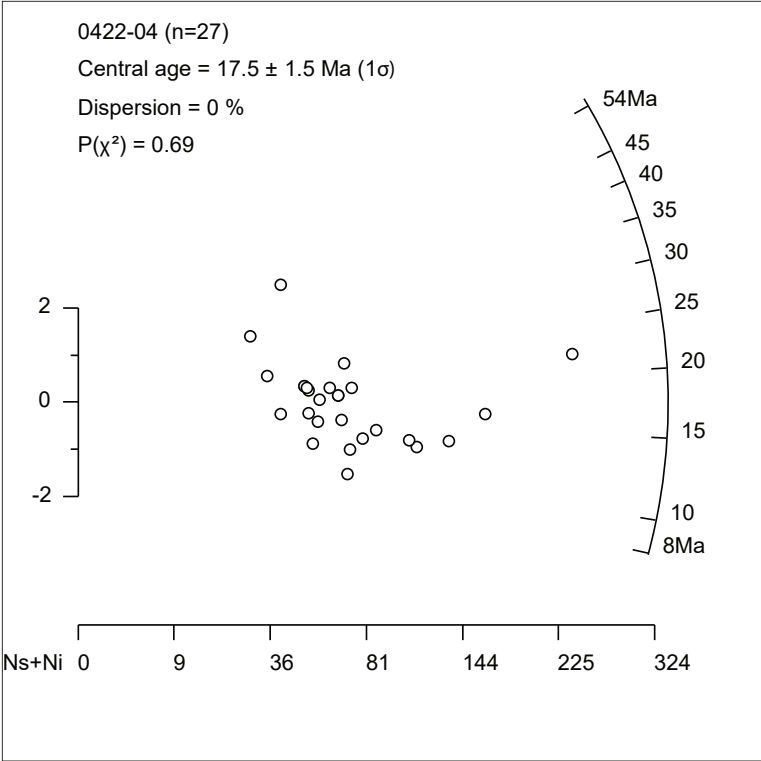

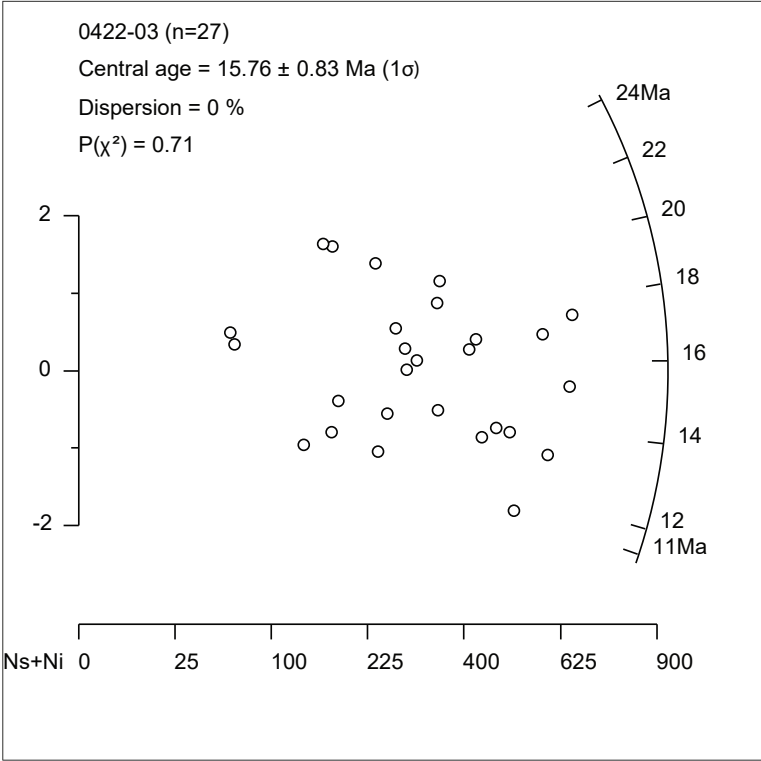

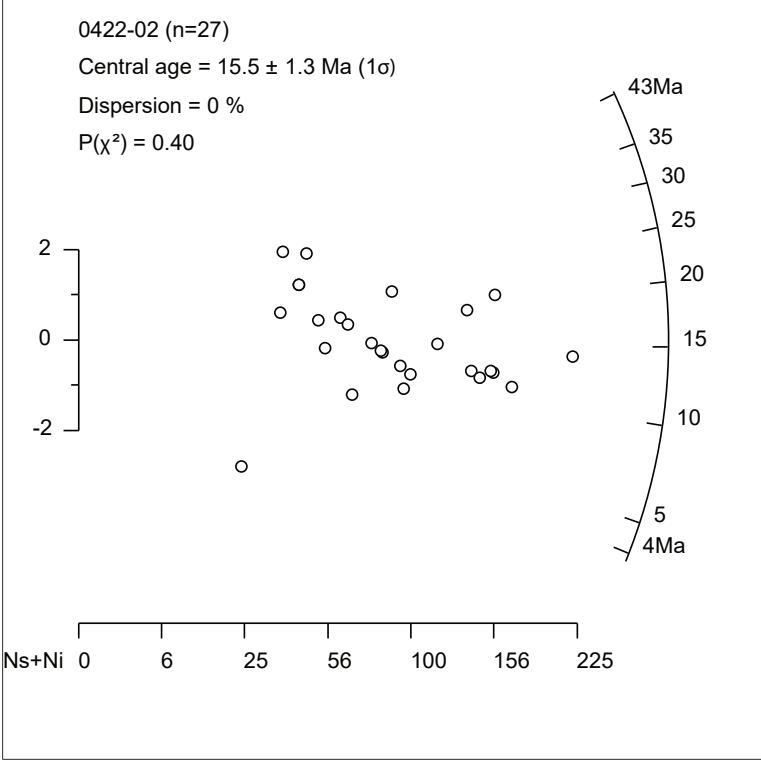

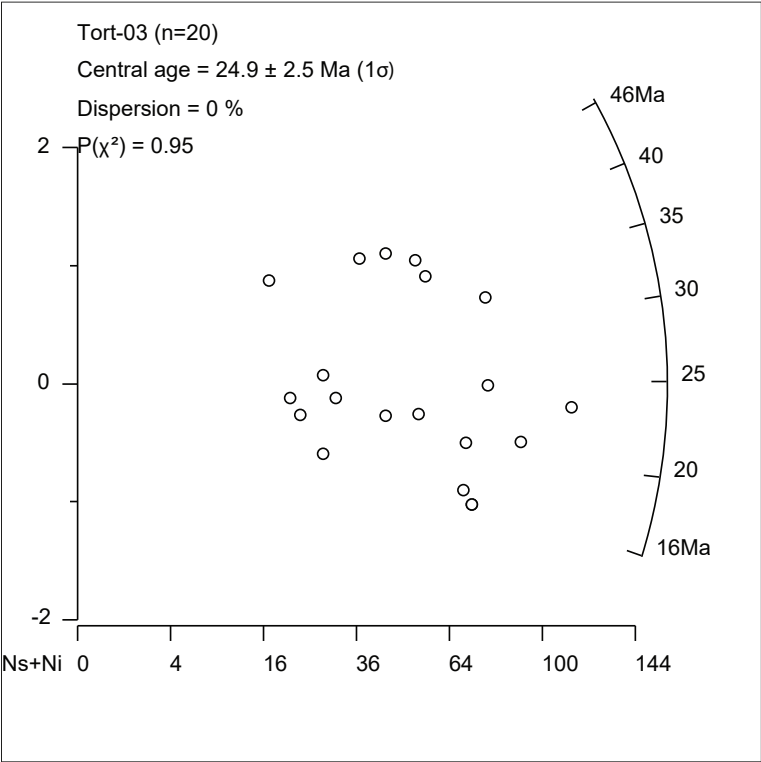

³School of Geography, Earth and Atmospheric Sciences, University of Melbourne, Melbourne, Victoria, 3010, Australia

Figure S6: Radial plots for apatite fission-track calculating central ages. N_s+N_i is the total number of counted spontaneous and induced tracks per sample. Dispersion is the number of single-grain ages that fall outside a 2-sigma distribution. $P(X^2)$ is the chi-squared value, a value greater than 0.05 suggests that the distribution of single-grain ages comprise a single population.

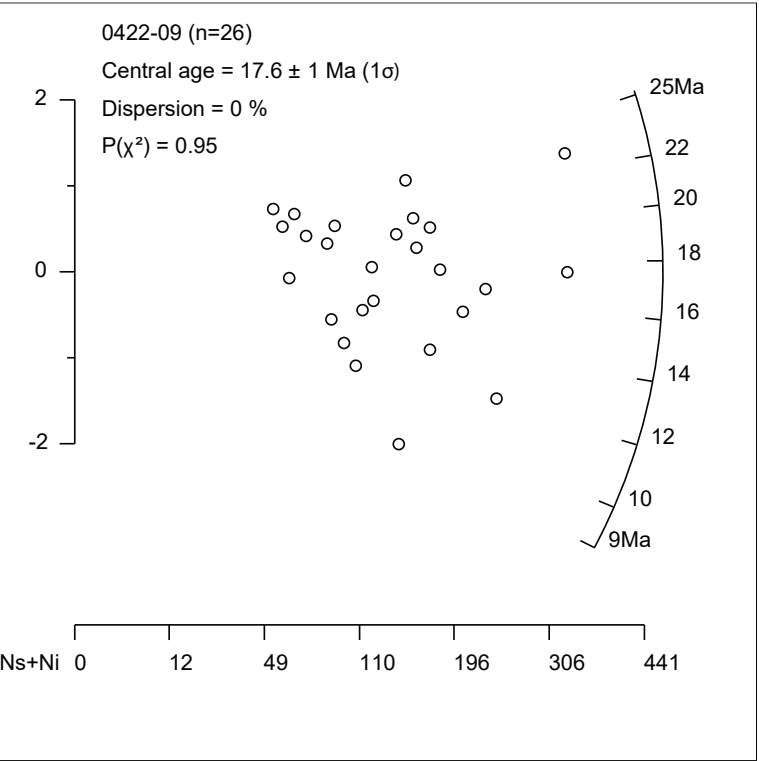

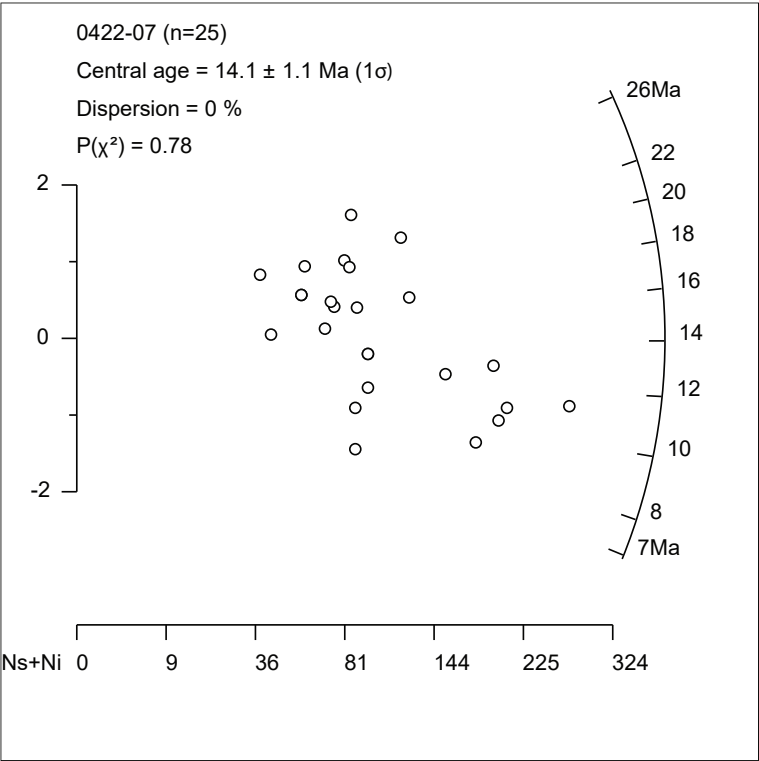

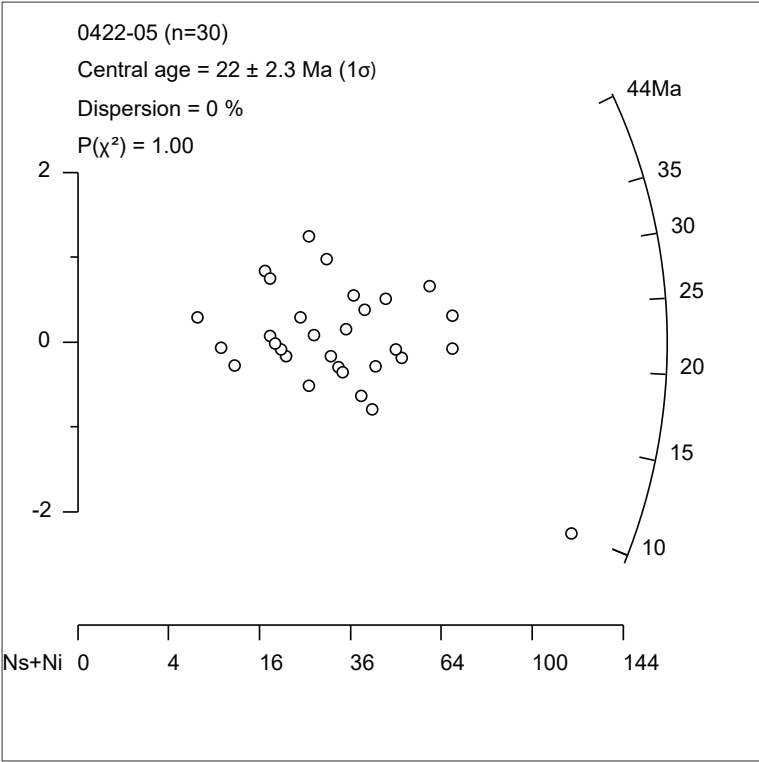

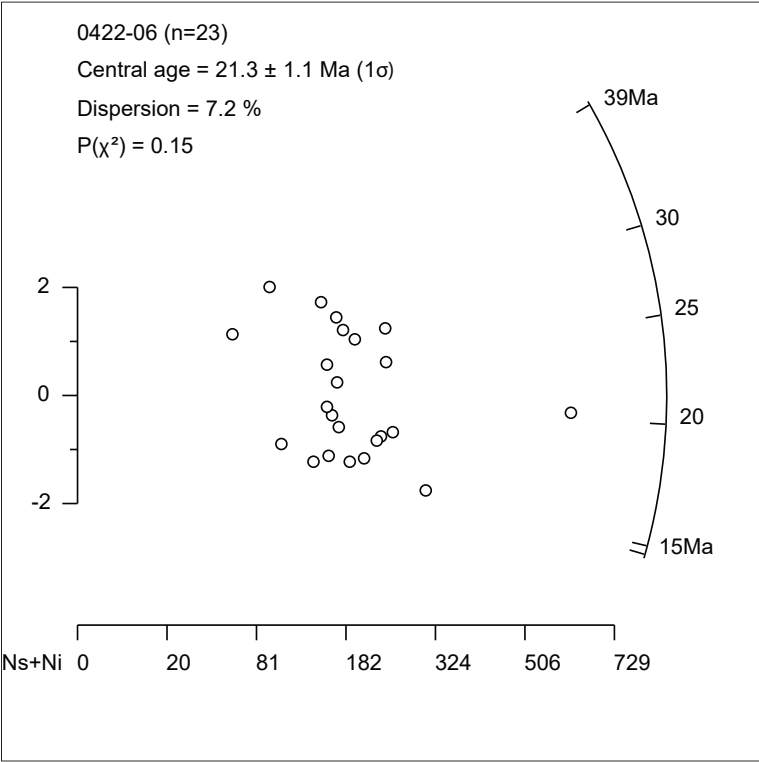

Catalina Metamorphic Core Complex: Apatite Fission-Track 1

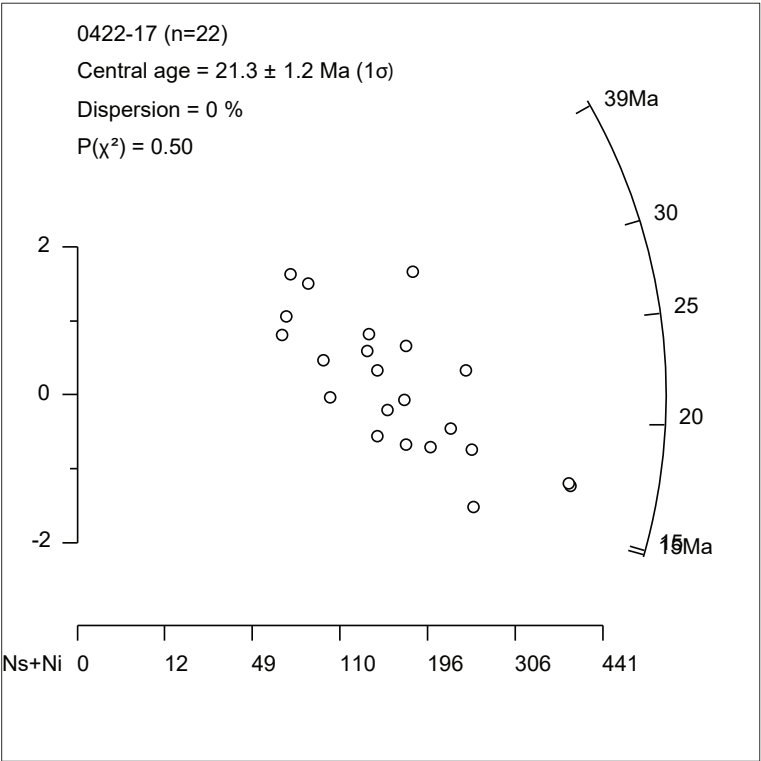

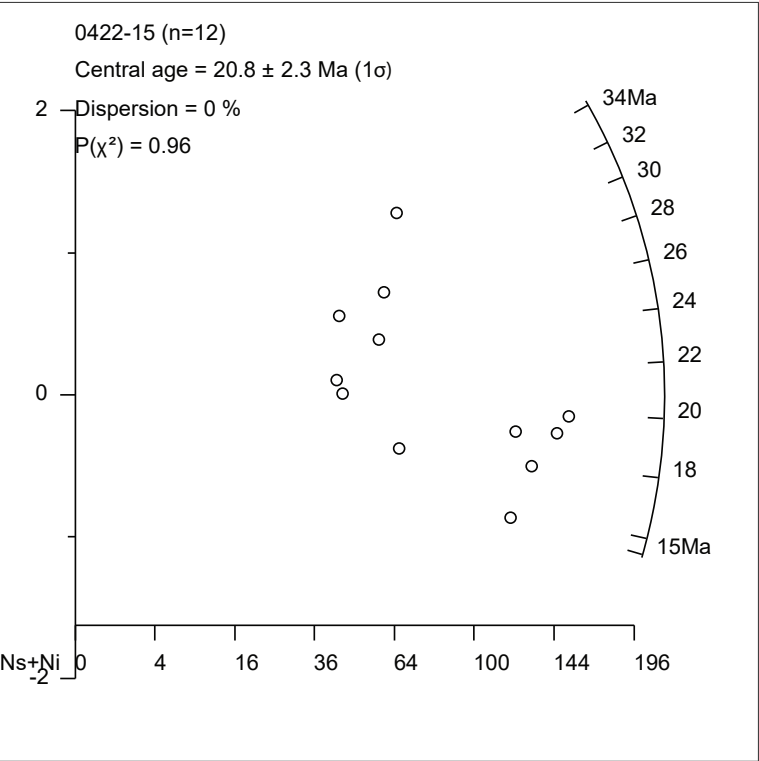

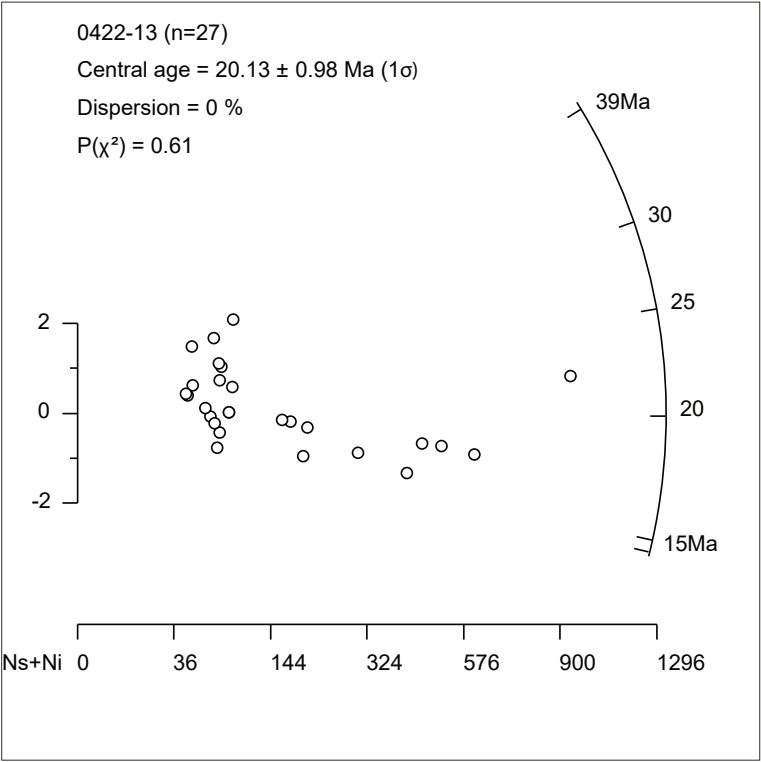

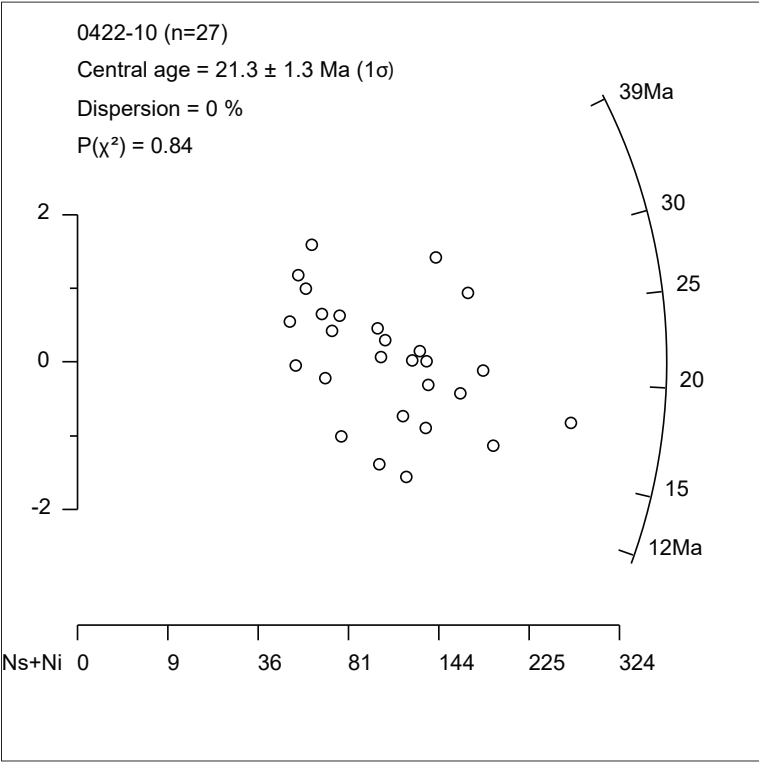

Catalina Metamorphic Core Complex: Apatite Fission-Track 2

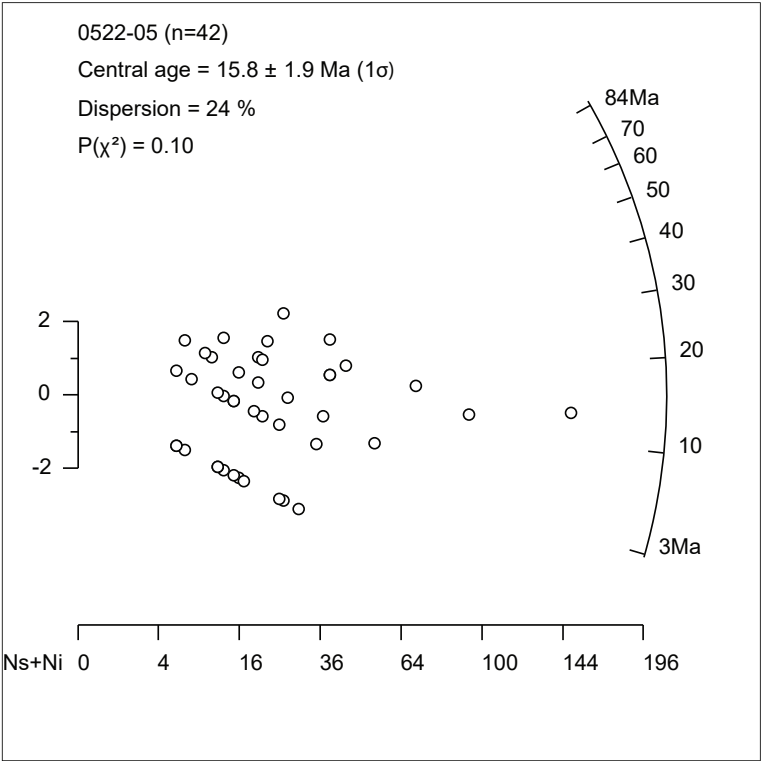

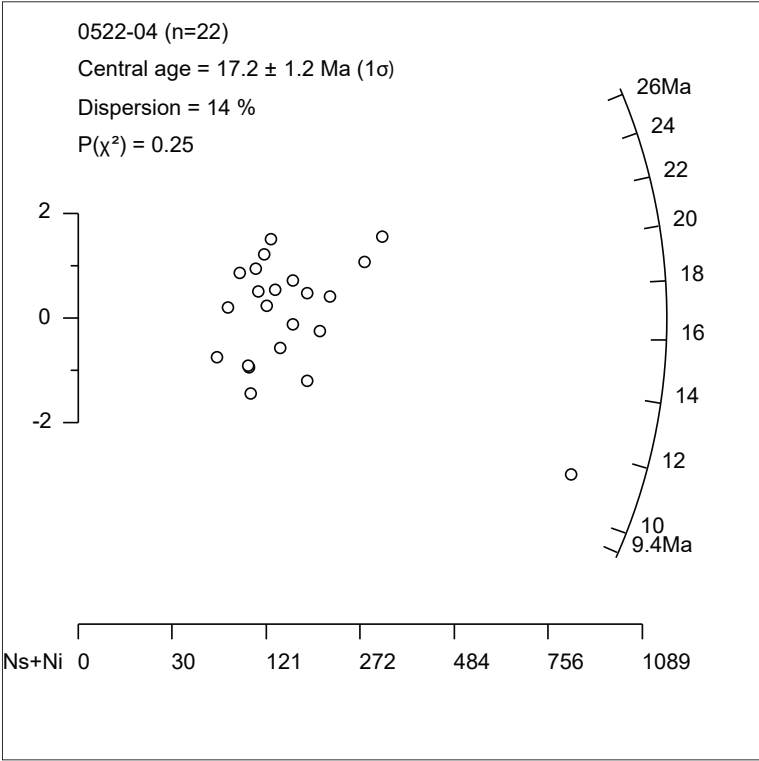

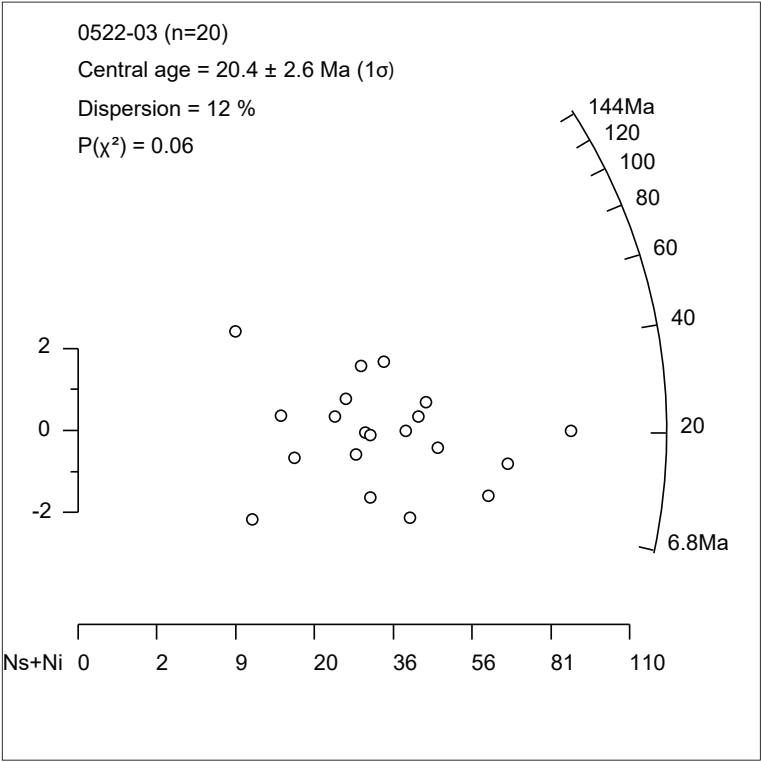

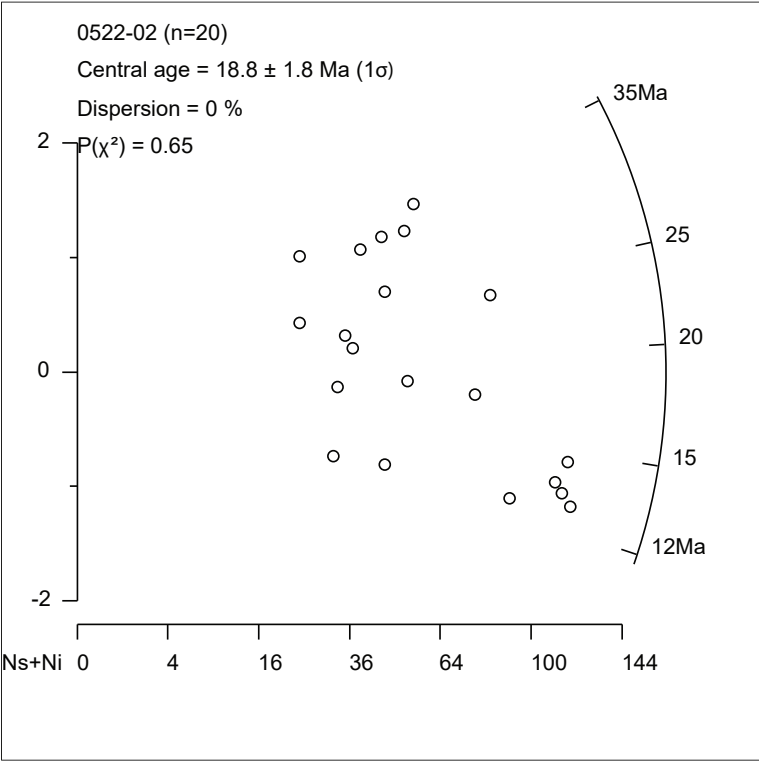

Catalina Metamorphic Core Complex: Apatite Fission-Track 3

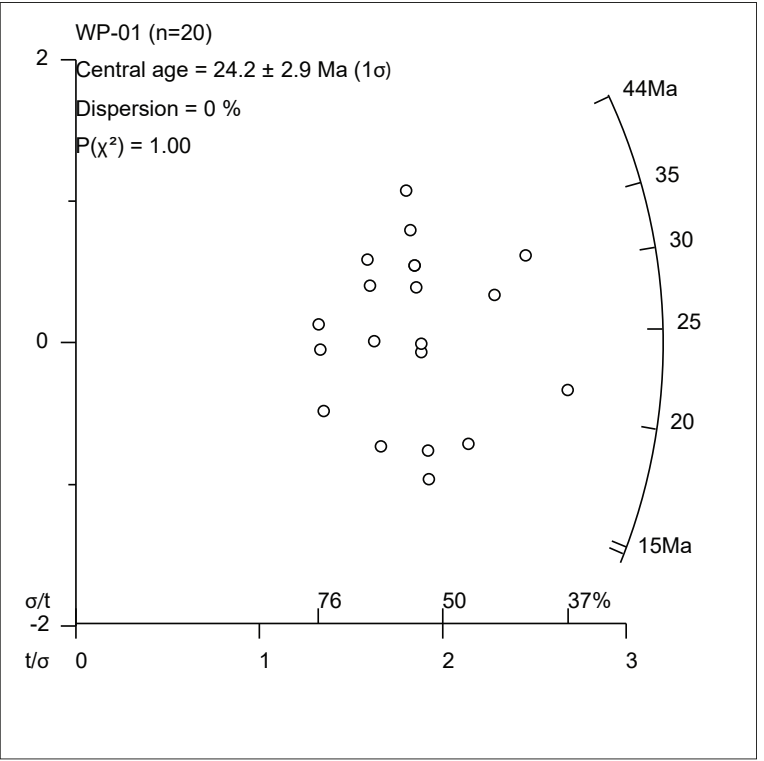

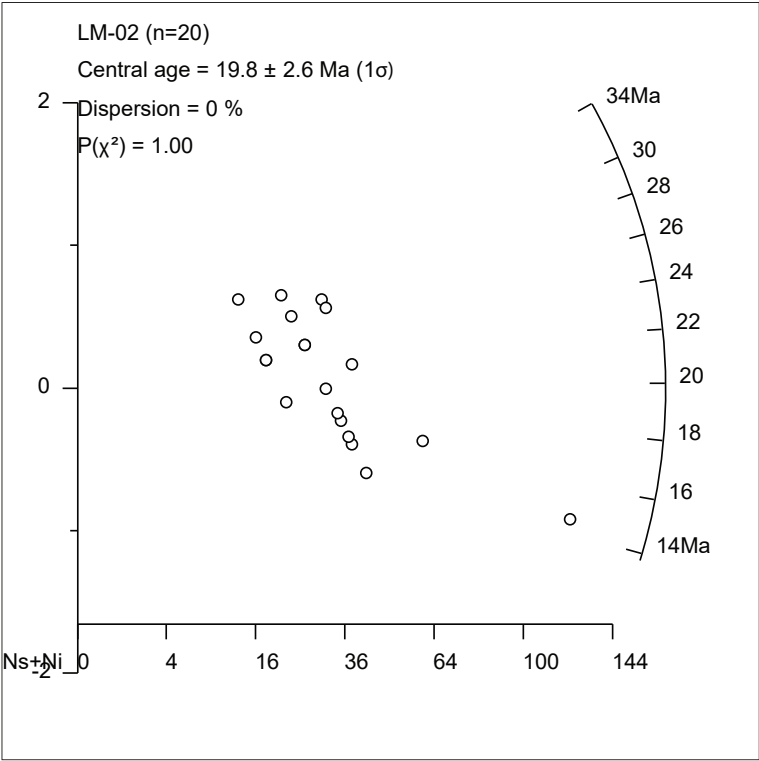

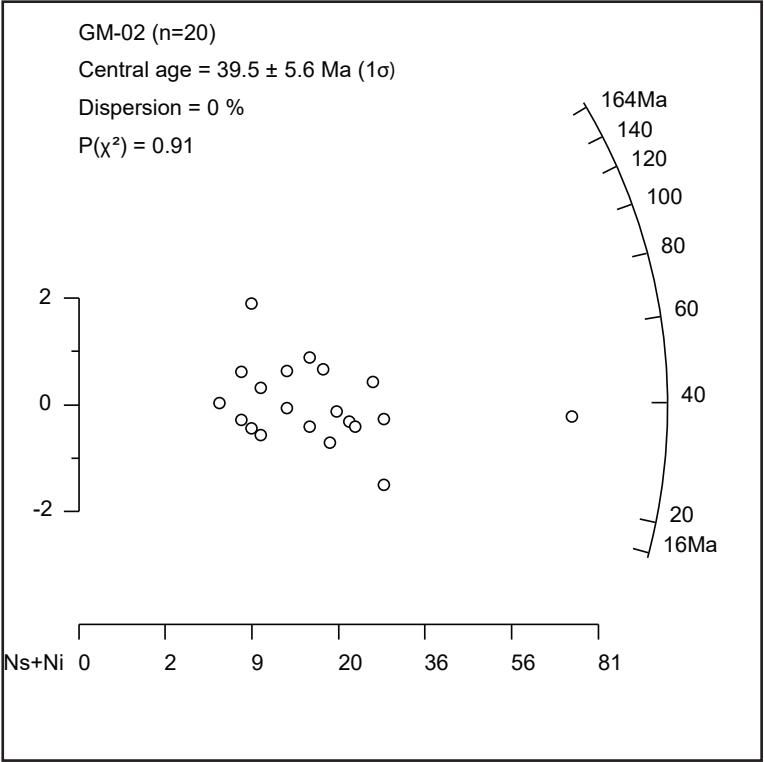

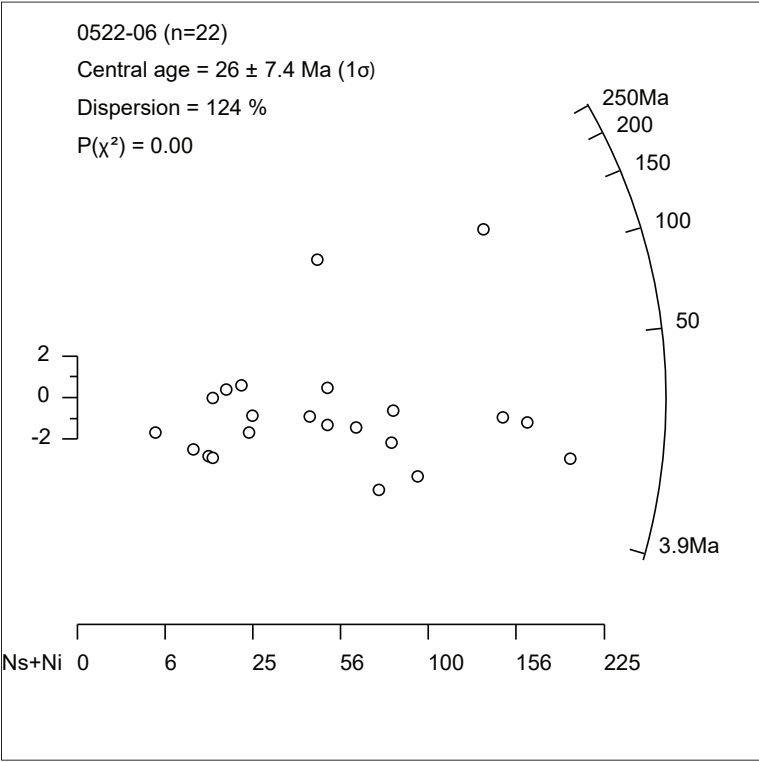

Catalina Metamorphic Core Complex: Apatite Fission-Track 4

Catalina Metamorphic Core Complex: Apatite Fission-Track 5

Catalina Metamorphic Core Complex: Apatite Fission-Track 6

Catalina Metamorphic Core Complex: Apatite-Zircon Fission-Track 7

